

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA
Annual Report 2016

Executive Officer's Report

In 2015-16 Union Aid Abroad achieved another year of strong partnership with union and community organisations around the globe in fifteen countries. Importantly we lifted our visibility in Australia for internationalist unionism and set the path for our future work here at home which aims to connect campaign priorities of the Australian union movement to the struggles of union and social movements globally.

In February 2016 we launched Asbestos. Not here. Not anywhere., a campaign aiming to end asbestos use across the Asia by banning asbestos and bringing in comprehensive eradication programs. Australia, despite an asbestos ban since 2002, is still not asbestos-free as products manufactured in Asia and imported to Australia sometimes still contain asbestos. Global bans would once and for all stop illegal imports to Australia. By working with Australian unions, experts and government organisations, we aim to bring our country's commitment, skill and knowledge to our work in Vietnam, Indonesia, Cambodia and Laos. This year Australian unions and asbestos experts have responded positively to the campaign and have made commitments to work with us in 2017-18. We know the asbestos industry lobby has escalated its work with countries in Asia to expand the use of the 'deadly dust'. Those that seek to profit from asbestos use take full advantage of weak trade union movements or corrupt government officials to establish new manufacturing sites or fund governments to establish the 'safe use' of asbestos. In Australia we know the only safe use is no use and we will work with Australians to support those campaigning against asbestos use in Asia.

This year we employed Samantha Bond on a project basis in Melbourne to work with Victorian union leaders to sign up staff and officials of unions to Union Aid Abroad membership. After a successful program of recruitment and our first Melbourne fundraising dinner attended by 300 supporters, our Committee of Management has decided to continue an ongoing Melbourne staff presence. We look forward to building on this initial work in 2016-17 and beyond.

Our new 2017-2020 strategic plan has been finalised and aims to:

1. Focus on movement-building in our international work, supporting trade unions and allied social movements;
2. Connect to core national and international priorities of the Australian union movement and seek opportunities to work through the Australian union movement in areas of shared interest;
3. Build a large and active membership of individuals that donate regularly and acts in solidarity with union and community struggles internationally and in Australia.

Thanks to all of our staff currently based in Sydney, Melbourne, Dili, Ramallah, Phnom Penh, Hanoi and Vientiane. We closed our Honiara office in the Solomon Islands and farewelled staff after the end of a six-year program to support the activities of village-based education and training through the Australian government's aid program. We continue to work with two former Union Aid Abroad staff through a new local organisation established to advocate for this level of adult education.

We thank our volunteers and activists around Australia and those who work for us internationally.

Thanks to members of our governing Committee of Management and our Finance and Risk Committee which continue to provide guidance, support and stability.

Thanks to the Australian unions and global unions that work with us to support our efforts - both internationally and here at home. The current local political pressures on Australian unions are unheralded and yet we are globalised like never before. How we campaign together with others in the Asia-Pacific region will be part of our future work in organising workers, the poor and dispossessed.

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

Australian unions working globally in partnership for the achievement of dignity at work, social justice, economic equality and the realisation of human rights.

We work to achieve this through strong unions and social movements, sustainable development programs, global solidarity and support at times of crisis.

Chairperson's Report

The injustice of 'smash and grab' capitalism and the challenge ahead

As 2016 comes to a close, we are witnessing a world where there is a growing contestation between a nationalist-populist upsurge on the Right and anti-austerity mobilization on the Left. Neo-liberalism lives on in global policy, but as a mobilising ideology, its power is weakened.

We find ourselves at a very important moment in history. The Right is on the rise — from India to the USA, Russia to South Korea. Leading politicians now openly attack ethnic 'others' to bolster 'their own' bloc, scapegoating 'immigrants' to hide their own inadequacies. Geopolitical tensions are on the rise, fueled by economic rivalry and unilateralism.

As power is more nakedly pursued, as it becomes more visible, it will need to be more directly resisted.

The real challenge for the Left is to develop and offer a meaningful narrative and project — re-energising and growing the movement — to resist the rise of the Right. It will require an analysis to deal with the disenchantment and alienation experienced by working people the world over. It will require offering solutions too, the foundation of which must be underscored by human rights and trade union rights to build unity among workers of the world as the bulwark against the populist nationalism of the Right.

We must learn from the powerful movements that have been born out of the injustices of 'smash and grab' capitalism. Movements against dispossession, from small-scale farmers in La Via Campesina, to Global Union Federations linking workers in supply chains. There are also new global links being forged in fields of climate justice, though Trade Unions for Energy Democracy for instance.

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA is part of these global mobilisations. More than ever, our future in Australia hinges on workers movements worldwide. In the new 2016 Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA strategy we are dedicated to building worker and other social movement organisations, realizing our great strength is in bringing together movements in solidarity. We are especially focused on regional movements to advance workers and union rights, to realize refugee rights and to fight for climate justice.

Social justice depends on union-building. Decent jobs depend on union density. Our current campaign focus on halting the asbestos trade in Asia demonstrates this. The power of unions is key to challenging asbestos — as a community-wide and workplace issue. Growing success in the campaign strengthens the union base, and advances new forms of common action and unity across the region, including Australia.

Refugee rights are workers' rights. Across South-East Asia, refugees are denied basic citizenship and have to fight for the right to work.

Stateless workers are put in permanent limbo, stigmatized or deported. Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA is seeking to work with regional unions and human rights campaigners to gain workers rights for refugees. If refugees can be denied basic rights, then so can anyone: 'Touch one touch all', in the words of the Australian union movement.

Climate change is now core 'union business', recognised as such by the International Trade Union Confederation. All justice depends on a stable climate. Unless we have climate justice, we cannot have social justice. Our work with unions in the Asia-Pacific shows climate is now a key workplace issue — for example, the epidemic of heat stress from climate change is set to endanger household incomes, health and livelihood. Climate transitions offer possible positive futures, but the weight of the largest global movement — the trade union movement — is needed to make this a reality. We are working with partners region-wide to claim these futures for workers and communities, and to stop 'green' capital calling the shots.

In all three fields we are responding to our members and are building on the existing strong links in our common struggle for Global Justice. In this time of ideological turmoil we are finding new traction and leverage for progressive projects, creating new possibilities in the ruins of neoliberalism.

Front Cover:

In 2016, we launched Asbestos. Not here. Not anywhere. a campaign to support the banning and eradication of asbestos across South East Asia. Australian unionists and supporters across the country responded enthusiastically to our call to protect workers and communities everywhere from the deadly dust of asbestos.

ASBESTOS. NOT HERE. NOT ANYWHERE.

Asbestos was a relatively unknown issue in South-East Asia when Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA launched its first asbestos disease prevention project in Vietnam in 2010. Over the last six years, the situation has changed considerably – what was then an unknown, difficult to publicly discuss issue is now getting high level attention.

Key achievements for the project this year were the development of a National Asbestos Profile (NAP) in Lao PDR and a National Action Plan for the Elimination of Asbestos-Related Diseases (NPEARD) in Vietnam, and the extension of our asbestos disease prevention work into two new countries - Indonesia and Cambodia.

The NAP is a tool developed by the World Health Organisation (WHO) to define the national baseline situation of asbestos use, storage, transport and disposal patterns, and to identify populations at risk from exposure. The first draft of the NAP for Lao PDR was completed in July 2016 after a great deal of work with APHEDA partner organisations and concerned government Ministries. The completion of the NAP is a tremendous achievement, augmented by the development in 2016 of draft 'Chemical Law' legislation by our project partner, the Lao Ministry of Industry and Commerce. The Chemical Law will provide key regulatory guidelines on hazardous substance management, including asbestos. The draft Law was approved at a Prime Ministerial meeting in October 2016 and is expected to be approved by the National Assembly by early 2017.

Meanwhile, Vietnam, which completed its asbestos profile in 2012, has moved to the next stage by developing its NPEARD. Finalised this year, the plan has been presented to the Ministry of Health and is expected to be approved in early 2017. Vietnam also saw progress in building awareness of the health impact of asbestos among government, the health sector and at-risk communities. Vietnamese project activities were covered extensively in local and national print, television and online media. The project continues to work with nine cancer centres in Vietnam to continue and improve the quality of data collection on mesothelioma diagnoses.

During 2015-16, Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA extended its asbestos disease prevention work into two new countries: Indonesia and Cambodia. In Indonesia we formed a partnership with an occupational health and safety advocacy organisation called the Local Initiative OHS Network (LION). LION is organising workers in 26 asbestos factories in conjunction with a local union SERBUK (Popular Workers' Federation). Meanwhile, funding from the Australian Embassy's Direct Aid Program in Cambodia has helped us build new partnerships with the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training and the Building and Wood Workers' Trade Union Federation of Cambodia. The Ministry has formed a National Asbestos Profile Working Group, consisting of 13 ministry representatives, three trade union representatives and two employer association representatives. This group will work with APHEDA, WHO and the International Labour Organisation to collect and document available information and develop an asbestos profile for Cambodia. This working group will also assist in building unity amongst three national centres as asbestos work is bringing them together for the first time under one committee.

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA campaigns for the banning of asbestos and towards post-asbestos futures by building cross-sectoral alliances between trade unions, OH&S organisations, community groups, governments and employers.

Vietnam Capacity Building Evaluation: Supply chains need standards & organised workers

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA recently evaluated the long term impact of a project undertaken between 2006-2008 in partnership with the Trade Union Solidarity Centre of Finland (SASK). The project aimed to improve working conditions and labour relations between employers and employees in 18 factories in the south of Vietnam. All the factories were suppliers to Finnish retailers and were required by their Finnish customers to conform with a supply chain standard known as the Business Social Compliance Initiative (BSCI).

At the time, most of the companies, which produced garments, frozen seafood, handicrafts, and furniture, were not aware of their legal obligations and experienced difficulties putting in place systems to ensure they adequately addressed health and safety for their workers, had appropriate industrial relations practices, and basic environmental protection practices – all requirements of the BSCI standards.

The main finding of the evaluation, eight years after the end of the project, was that the improvements had been maintained. This shows that corporate social responsibility standards, like BSCI, can play a role in improving working conditions for the workers in global supply chains. But it also showed that such supply chain standards do little to raise the bar beyond the minimum legal requirements.

The garment and textile industry is one of the largest in Vietnam and is the focus of our organising work in the country.

Only trade union organising can help improve conditions beyond the legal minimum and towards fair wages and conditions. And that is precisely what Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA has now been doing for 6 years in Vietnam, initially with a trade union capacity building project in partnership with SASK (2009-2011), and subsequently with the International Labour Organisation, as a part of the Better Work Vietnam program (2011-2016) focusing on the garment industry in seven provinces.

Evaluations of the trade union programs show that this project has developed very effective methods – including participatory learning methods, mentoring, and peer networks – for building the capacity of provincial trade unions to support factory unions in their efforts to organise and respond to the needs of workers.

Living wages for the fight against poverty

The most effective way to eliminate poverty is the collective struggle for women and men to have safe, secure jobs with decent wages. Partners of Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA in many countries are unions or other organisations that take forward the fight for adequate wages.

In South Africa, the Trust for Community Education and Outreach promotes organic farming skills and food sovereignty. They assist mass organisations of small-hold farmers, the Rural Women's Movement, and farm worker unions such as the Commercial, Stevedoring and Allied Workers' Union (CSAAWU). In 2016, their members in the Robertson Winery in the Western Cape went on strike for 14 weeks to raise their wages from AU$270 a month to AU$780. The strike ended in November 2016 with the union winning an 8 per cent pay increase backdated to August and an annual bonus for workers. Our other long-term partner, Workers World Media Productions, has been educating working people across southern Africa about the issue. From 2012 there have been long hard-fought strikes by mainly women farm labourers in the Winelands of the Western Cape, initially demanding AU$14 per day, with many workers dismissed and some gaoled. The stakes are high, since so few people in South Africa have formal work, living costs are high, and poverty is increasing.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia, unions looked to have had an important wage victory earlier this year, with the Government's Labour Advisory Council increasing the minimum wage in the garment sector from US$140 to US$153/month, effective January 2017. For the first time, Cambodian trade unions presented a united front to the negotiation process, advocating unanimously for an increase to US$171, although after months of negotiations, 22 unions (including five pro-government unions) split and voted for the government's proposed lower figure.

However, in November 2016, labour unions and NGOs were reporting deep concern at the first draft of a new expanded minimum wage law, particularly Articles 25 and 26, which place heavy fines on those who "create obstacles or putting illegal pressure on discussions to determine the minimum wage" or who "incite activities against the declaration of the minimum wage". Mr Sok Kin, Deputy President of the Building and Wood Workers Trade Union Federation, told the Phnom Penh Post that these clauses would quash unions. "When wages are low, the workers must protest... This law was designed to restrict independent unions' activities." It is hoped that the Government will continue the movement towards a national minimum wage with active consultation of trade unions and other stakeholders.

Exploitation of labour migration brings all workers down

In Australia around 1.5 million workers do not have permanent residence, and often this vulnerable status is exploited through poor wages and conditions. These workers include students, 457 visa holders, seasonal workers, and workers on bridging and working holiday visas. Their work — harvesting crops, cleaning, caring, and working unsocial hours in restaurants and shops — sustains profits for both small and large businesses, as well as multinational companies. In the last year alone, there have been exposés of dramatic underpayment of charity collectors, service station and convenience store staff, and farm workers.

Yet it does not have to be this way, especially in a country like Australia. With political will, well-designed migrant labour programs are possible, with in-country education and training up to Australian standards, union access to workers, regulation of labour hire companies and enforcement of Australian labour standards.

Globally, there are 65 million refugees fleeing persecution, war or climate crisis disasters. In late 2015, the ILO estimated there were 150 million cross-border migrant workers — 45% of whom are women including 12 million domestic workers. Most migrant workers move temporarily — working overseas and sending remittances home to their family. For some, work is a way to permanently move country.

In 2016, the National Union of Workers and the Vanuatu National Workers Union developed a strategy to prevent Ni-Vanuatu workers in Australia from being exploited under the Seasonal Workers Program. Union Aid Abroad helps connect Australian unions in support of better organised workplaces whether in Australia or internationally.

There are some large patterns, with workers from South and South East Asia going to richer East Asian countries, such as Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, Japan, Taiwan and Korea. Some workers travel further still to countries in the Persian Gulf or Eastern Mediterranean. With very high unemployment in Pacific Island nations, there is an increasing need for people to get jobs in Australia and other countries. Ten million Filipinos work overseas and their remittances constitute over 10% of the Philippines' GDP. More than 3.5 million Nepalis work abroad, contributing 32% of Nepal's GDP.

The issue of labour migration is one of the most significant issues for the workers' movement globally and in Australia — not only preventing the super-exploitation of non-residents being denied basic rights, but also defending the rights of all workers to fair, legal pay and conditions. The international trade union movement has campaigned strongly on the terrible situation of migrant construction workers in Qatar, and of Asian migrant workers in the whole of the Middle East.

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA has been working with refugees in Lebanon and in Southern Africa since its foundation in 1984. We now maintain strong partnerships with refugee organisations on the Myanmar-Thai border and in the Palestinian camps in Lebanon. We have long-standing education projects with migrant workers in Thailand and contract workers leaving the Philippines, and we have recently worked with Australian and Pacific Island unions to defend the rights of seasonal workers.

Active membership

In 2015-2016 membership of Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA grew by over 400. As ever, many of these new members came to APHEDA through the efforts of dedicated Union Aid Abroad activists in communities around the country, who include union leaders, educators, organisers, delegates and rank-and-file union members.

Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA opened a Melbourne office in May 2016, staffed by experienced Melbourne organiser and educator, Samantha Bond. Sam's history of work throughout the union movement in Victoria and nationally served her well in Melbourne, speaking at dozens of union conferences, workshops and rallies. Sam and the Melbourne activist group also held an APHEDA Melbourne Dinner in November 2016, the first one in some years. We're confident this will become as much a fixture of the union calendar alongside other successful Union Aid Abroad events such as the Sydney APHEDA Dinner, the Brisbane Trivia Night, the South Coast Spring APHEDA Dinner and Adelaide's Terri Daktyl Memorial Dinner.

Union Aid Abroad activists in WA also launched their first Perth APHEDA dinner in October 2016, a major success, and held a state-level international conference with Unions WA and SIGTUR, focusing discussions around trade justice, tax justice and anti-austerity campaigning.

Asbestos: Not Here, Not Anywhere

Since its launch in February 2016 our Asbestos: Not Here, Not Anywhere campaign has continued to build momentum, with a growing awareness that the fight for asbestos eradication can only be fought with an internationalist outlook. APHEDA staff have appeared at multiple union conferences to introduce the campaign, and we have developed a campaign website (apheda.org.au/asbestos) with a variety of resources to help Union Aid Abroad members everywhere spread the word and call people to action.

Union support

Alongside the continued support of the ACTU, many unions expressed their commitment to international solidarity and global justice through contributions to Union Aid Abroad-APHEDA. A growing number of unions additionally sponsored specific overseas projects. Thanks also to the unions who promoted APHEDA's work in union journals and social media.

Australian Government support

Grants from the Australian government's aid program in 2015-16 totalled $2.4M. We delivered Australian Aid-funded work for a food security project in the West Bank and Gaza, through the Australian Middle East NGO Cooperation Agreement. Via the Australian NGO Cooperation Program, we supported work across seven countries. We thank the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade for its ongoing support.
